The Economic Perspective of The Quest for Racial Equality for African Americans

Throught the United States of America's history, there has been an economic disadvantage toward different ethnicities, including African-Americans. This began since the time of the slave trade, when Africans were captured like animals from their own homeland and dragged to a country called America. There they were sold like livestock and used for back breaking labor. Their efforts were largely unrewarded because of their differences. They were treated unequally and contributions were not properly valued even to the time of the Civil War, where they themselves (with help) finally sought out freedom! They were free, but were they really? Were the majority rich and prosperous? NO! Some were tenant farmers to their old masters, in worse conditions than before. The Civil Rights movement finally tried to finish it once and for all. The debates of all the great politicians were for the greater economic good of their bretheren. All the laws passed, all the blood shed, and all the pain and struggle. What is so hard about making everything fair? After all, in a sense, we only exist to make a path for the next generation. Why not for them? I guess it's up to this generation to fix the problem. We have to stop this economic discrimination for everyone!!!
