More than 120,000 Japanese were interned behind barbed wire during World War Two... over half were children. All the children that did go to the camps were filled with fear to go. At the camps, children were separated from their parents. Also at the camps, some teens that were in school, outside of camp, could leave the camps and go to school. While in the camps, teenage boys and adult men were drafted into the war to help the USA.

But before any of the children and teens went to the camps, they had to go through seeing signs in store windows that told Japanese to keep out and other things like that.

Leaving pets was the hardest thing to do for children. The hardest things to do for teens was to deal with the pain of losing their identity as Americans.

Teenagers, before leaving for the camps, would listen to the hits of the week on The Hit Parade (people back then didn't have CD's or iPods).
The Camps
- Purposes for Different Camps
- Locations of Camps
- Building Camps
- Arrival and Processing
- Living Conditions

Life in the Camps
- Jobs
- Children and Teens
- Activities in Camp
- Medical Care

Military Actions
- Propaganda and Bias
- Fighting Nisei
- Spies during World War II

Effects of the Camps
- Impact on Family Life
- Impacts on Japanese Culture
- Economic Impact
- Costs of Program

Evacuation/ Relocation
- The Evacuation
- Property Seizures
- Relocation from Camp

Online Newspapers
- Period 2 Newspaper
- Period 5 Newspaper
- Period 6 Newspaper

Citations:

http://library.thinkquest.org/04apr/00065/internmentact.htm